

As with DirecTV, my television provider, I enjoy XM Satellite's variety and access anywhere I go. I do not see why there should be any restriction on what I watch or listen to, or how or where - if XM's ability to provide superior service results in their gaining market share then so be it. I know there are always concerns about protecting the competitive environment and worry over losing local stations and then the resultant price creep - but you know, if that happens over time, I am sure the market system will see profits to be gained and re-establish stations that may have been lost in the interim. I know one thing - I watch what is happening to my local cable provider and I like what they are doing in reaction to competition from the satellite providers. If XM and Cerius want to do local content - then Go! baby go!
